leaves stranded fishermen Rescuers place makeshift piers on a small fishing boat to seek help as it drifts in the Gulf of Mexico in Houston, Texas, August 26, 2017.

Reuters/Tami Chappell HOUSTON The Gulf Coast is bracing for the record worst storm in recent memory, after the monster Hurricane Harvey became a Category 4 hurricane, triggering evacuations for thousands of residents and inundating industrial ports, roads, homes and businesses in Texas, Louisiana and western and central Florida. Police warn residents to evacuate ahead of Hurricane Harvey, August 27, 2017.

Reuters/Joshua Roberts The Category 5 storm is currently lashing the coastal Texas and Louisiana communities where it was first photographed with winds near 175 miles (280 kilometers) per hour, according to the National Hurricane Center in Miami. ADVERTISEMENT Before landfall, the storm was about 100 miles west of Rockport, Texas, and 90 miles east of Port Arthur. Since the storm hit the Texas coast, thousands of people have left for the safety of the coast, prompting a public transportation system to be deployed, which may be overwhelmed. Fishermen are being advised to stay in the Gulf of Mexico, as the storm has been expected to bring winds and rainfall of 45 to 60 inches. "Harvey is a very unusual weather event," National Weather Service meteorologist David Jantzen told Reuters. "You don't normally see this type of simultaneous cyclonic development within a storm. It's different than other events of this size." The National Hurricane Center says the storm is forecast to weaken slightly to a Category 4 hurricane before
