Undercover Boss Undercover Boss is an American reality game show that airs on American Broadcasting Company (ABC) (2005–present). It stars Greg Brenneman, a manager who poses as an employee of a company in order to gain insight into how the company operates. Brenneman first became the boss of a company called Crossroads Creative Services, an advertising agency. He lived with his family in Beverly Hills, California, and went undercover as a copywriter, but was caught at the end of the series. CBS aired a celebrity spin-off series, Undercover Boss: Celebrity Edition, in 2011. It has since been spun off into a second series, Undercover Boss: From the Inside in 2018. A third series, Undercover Boss: New York, aired from 2019 to 2020. Premise Greg Brenneman, who has been described as a "young, friendly version of Tony Robbins," works as a copywriter for Crossroads Creative Services, an advertising agency that is owned and operated by Diane Day, a woman in her 50s. He is given a choice as to whether he wants to live as a copywriter, an assistant to the CEO or a mole in the executive boardroom. He chooses the latter. He goes undercover and lives at the company for 4–7 weeks. He ultimately learns a lot about his own company, as well as the inner workings of a real-world organization. After the target company learns that Brenneman is an undercover employee, he is left to decide what to do about his "shady" status, often choosing to return to his life as a copywriter. What's new:

AS is a semi-automatic rifle platform by FN Herstal with AR-15 style of operation (intended to be called XCR). The boomerang gun was born in response to the conditions of the Afghanistan War and other conflicts where the Military was lacking in the capacity to effectively engage the enemy. Boomerang XAS is a combination of the mobility of the Soldiers themselves, the range firepower of the M249 Light Machine Gun and the accuracy of the precision rifles. As the Soldiers are moving about they can use their personal .50 Cal heavy machine guns or M249 Light Machine Gun for stabilization while engaging targets out to 800-1000 yds. As they move to engage those targets they (the Soldiers) will quickly fire and immediately move into position again taking out their next targets out to approximately 1,500-2,000 yds as they engage their targets. This way, the Soldiers can move from behind cover to engage their targets before they have a chance to notice them. During World War II, the British used the Bren light machine gun, and soon after that the Germans also adopted this pattern which in turn changed the tactics of both wars. One crucial thought was the protection of the observer, and soon the need for a vehicle that could be transported to the area was obvious. The spigot type of M249 can have a coefficient of drag greater than 50, and is easily carried by Soldiers, and the M249 is able to engage targets out to 800-1000 yds and capable of firing 3000 rounds per minute. With the aim of providing this kind of stable long range engagement the FN boomerang XAS rifle was born. The battery of XAS includes an under-barrel magazine tube for 30mm cartridges and two under-barrel external 50-round loops for M249, supporting up to 300 rounds at once. Thus, an ideal gun to accompany Soldiers on the battlefield. This new gun is equipped to feed from M249 magazines and it allows the Soldiers to use their personal .50 caliber heavy machine guns as standard rifles. The design of the FN boomerang is a reaction to today's modern enemies' weapons and tactics. Design Features

In modern war, the tactics of guerrilla and asymmetrical warfare demand users to plan their mission to fight effectively without the notice of the enemy. The asymmetrical warfare is a major challenge for the 21st Century because firstly, most wars have been fought up

More than just a game, Moving is a platform to support mental health, it's a movement that brings together families of loved ones diagnosed with mental illness, it's a movement driven by the memories, struggles and hopes of the people it's created for. If you live with a loved one with a mental illness, how do you know whether something is actually a mental illness or how to manage a loved one's behavior? Have you ever thought there was something different about your loved one's moods, changes in appetite and sleep patterns? Or maybe your loved one is making changes to their life and looking for ways to try and feel more in control? If your loved one has any changes in their mind, brain or behavior, it's possible that they may be experiencing their first signs of a mental illness. Symptoms like these, are sometimes referred to as "Mood Swings". Mood Swings can range from being normal to an urgent, and sometimes, even dangerous situation. Often a general practitioner or family doctor is the first to notice them and they may miss their first warning signs. "Moving" is a game in which you play a role in your loved one's life and become their keeper. The gameplay comes from the memory of a family's experiences and hopes to help people living with a mental illness at their first signs and in the meantime offer realistic decision-making to players struggling with decisions as a caregiver. The game is played from a first-person perspective as a family member who you'll be managing through their adventure at different stages to allow players to get the feel of how to manage your loved one. At different stages in the game, you'll follow the player through everyday life by interacting with them, providing ways to improve their mood, manage their brain and body functions and guide them through some of life's normal experiences and adventures that families of mental patients face.

Characteristics: ?Empathetic AI: The game's AI learns the player's responses by tracking how the player managed their loved one's moods, behaviour, and lifestyle in the past. For example, your loved one could have struggles sleeping, sometimes managing to stay awake for hours, and other times. Once the AI has a sense of the player's personal experiences and understands when that behaviour comes up and how they react, it can make more sensible decisions. ?Out of Bounds: The game adjusts the AI's sense of boundaries with context, allowing it to seek out different areas of the player's memory to develop its AI,
